

I would very much like my wireless number to be portable between carriers. The ONLY reason I don't shop for a better carrier or a better mobile plan is because I do not want to lose my mobile number, which I've had for over 3 years. And while I would also like to see service improved, I believe that will only happen through carrier competition. Competition will only happen if the carrier is afraid to lose my business, which won't happen unless I want to give up my number. I pay $10 per year for a permanent email address so I can switch my ISP when I'm not happy with the level of service provided. I'd certainly pay a nominal fee for the same privilege with mobile phone service.

Dean Ammons